Southwest Wisconsin Technical College

Re: Broadcast Localism (MB Docket 04-233)

Dear Madam Secretary:

The public interests of localism and diversity in radio broadcasting are currently being met in southwest Wisconsin. This rural and diffusely populated region is a highly fragmented media market served by numerous local broadcasters. QueenB Radio, with offices in Platteville, Wisconsin, operates stations WPVL, WGLR, and KIYX. These, among other small, independent broadcasters in the area, take an unquestionably local approach to serving the needs of their listeners.

Southwest Wisconsin Technical College, where I direct marketing and public relations functions, is the primary provider of technical education and career skills training in the broadcast area of QueenB Radio. More than five counties with a population of approximately 125,000 comprise the college district.

Local civic and business leaders and the public at large consider Southwest Tech an economic cornerstone of southwest Wisconsin because of its role in workforce development. Southwest Tech educates traditional college student, adults re-entering the workforce, and incumbent workers needing skill enhancement. The college is a valued community member as a training partner of local business, industry, government, and public safety agencies.

Southwest Tech, in turn, relies heavily upon QueenB Radio and other local broadcasters to assist in promoting the benefits and availability of technical education to a diverse audience. These radio stations regularly air news stories and public service announcements about activities, events, and classes held at Southwest Tech that are of interest to area residents. Southwest Tech partners with QueenB radio in promoting community events such as county fairs, and QueenB radio has broadcast debates among candidates for public office (specifically the 49th Wisconsin State Assembly District seat) that were organized and hosted by the college. Further, this spring QueenB Radio and other local stations were vital to Southwest Tech's public information campaign to educate local voters about the need for campus expansion. The result was healthy public debate and voter approval of a referendum.

Southwest Tech has an effective working relationship with QueenB Radio stations and other area broadcasters that helps the college to serve the public. My concern is that additional burdens placed on these stations ostensibly to meet localism and diversity objectives—something that these stations are already doing handily—would unduly detract from their current programming efforts, making them considerably less, not more, responsive to community needs.

Sincerely,

Peter E. Bickel
Director, Marketing and Public Relations
